Description of the disability and how it affects learning

Lily has Type 1 diabetes. Low or high blood sugar can affect her attention, energy and ability to take tests.

Accommodations in the classroom

Lily may check her blood glucose and eat a snack in class at any time. She may keep water and her glucose meter at her desk. She may use the restroom and visit the nurse without waiting for permission.

If Lily misses instruction because of a health visit, the teacher will provide the notes and extra time to make up the work.

Accommodations on tests

Lily may stop a test to treat a low and finish it later the same day without penalty. She may take state tests in a small group near the health office.

Health plan

Signs of low blood sugar: shaky, sweaty, pale, confused. If she shows these signs, give her 15 grams of fast-acting sugar from her kit and walk her to the nurse. Never send her to the nurse alone. If she is unconscious, call 911 and the nurse; the nurse will give glucagon.

Who is responsible

Classroom teachers implement the accommodations; the school nurse trains staff on the diabetes care plan each August.
